2/ District Maps

A collection of significant district maps drawn up to de-mark new unions of parishes, organised alphabetically by area name. These maps date predominantly from the 1860s (with two from the 1850s) and all include administrative detail in the form of letters from the relevant bodies or authorities, suggesting some significant parochial boundary reorganisation was underway by the 1860s. According to historian, Dr Miriam Moffit, whose book Soupers and Jumpers analysed in detail the work of the Irish Church Missions, this evidence shows the operational development of the mission infrastructure, into which mission stations, schools and readers would be inserted. The small quantity of correspondence and related papers gathered together as file /7 below provides further context and further text-based lists of townlands etc and with interesting population information therein. The collection demonstrates the realignment of historic parish boundaries to allow for new theological realities.

1. Aasleagh

'Deed of erection of the Parochial District of Aasleagh', dated June 2, 1854 and registered 13 July, 1854. Note inscribed by John Cather, incumbent of the parish of Aughagower in the Union of Westport, consenting to the formation of Aasleagh parochial district. Contains deed and note signed by 'Lord Baron Plunket'.

4/ Printed Secondary Maps

Being a smaller collection of 16 various Ordnance Survey maps showing parts of Galway and Mayo (corresponding with Tuam Diocese). These maps were probably purchased and used by the diocesan registry or office in order to determine proposed boundaries, but were never altered in any way. They have been retained to reflect the cartographical extent of the 19th and 20th century diocesan administration.
